□ True Process

As a growing IT consulting firm, Milwaukee-based True Process wanted their new space to reflect the culture and spirit of the organization, provide a flexible work environment to support continued growth and change, and accommodate a strict budget.

Forrer partnered with Groth Design Group of Milwaukee to develop a work environment for True Process that physically supports what they do and culturally represents who they are. Contemporary design elements and a simple color palette reflect the firm's high-tech image, while practical, modern furniture selections met the firm's need for budget and beauty all in one.

Panel-free workstations cost less while also providing for long-term flexibility - which means better long-term value. They can be easily reconfigured, allowing True Process to change the look and functionality of the space without needing to buy more furniture.

The end result is a workplace that truly works - cost-effective, efficient and always ready for change.
